Session Overview:

This workshop will delve into the dynamic role of disaster nursing in the broader context of planetary health. It aims to forge a synergy between localized approaches and universal health standards to enhance global disaster risk reduction efforts.

Methodology:

The workshop will engage participants through interactive methodologies including simulations, case study analyses, and group discussions based on global surveys, interviews with disaster nurses, and research findings from Japan, the UK, and the USA. These activities are designed to foster collaborative learning and cultivate actionable strategies for community engagement and resilience.

Panelists/Presenters:

Ai Yamada, an expert in global health and disaster nursing; Aarav Bhandari, a public health initiative specialist; and Emily Johnson, an emergency management authority, will guide the workshop. They bring diverse experiences and knowledge in disaster nursing, crucial for the development of adaptive strategies in health crises.

Expected Audience:

Healthcare professionals and emergency responders interested in enhancing their knowledge and skills in disaster nursing are encouraged to attend. The workshop will offer insights into integrating disaster nursing within cross-disciplinary frameworks to promote community resilience.

Coordination with the Organizing Committee:

We are open to collaboration with the committee to refine the workshop details and will communicate our specific needs for successful delivery. Panelist/Presenters/
